Training

UC San Diego offers training for Faculty and Staff on how to recognize and support students of concern

How to Support Students of Concern

During the interactive presentation, staff and faculty will learn how to identify students of concern, offer support, communicate their concerns and connect students to resources.

Staff and Faculty may sign up for trainings through the UC Learning Center, search: How to Support Students of Concern.

Triton Concern Line

The Triton Concern Line provides a streamlined way for faculty and staff to seek consultation and assistance regarding students of concern. The line is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Calls are referred to the appropriate Dean of Student Affairs the next business day morning.

Call (858) 246-1111 to report your concerns.
To learn more search Blink: Triton Concern Line.

Education

Center for Research on Educational Equity, Assessment and Teaching Excellence (CREATE)

“Great teachers do not all have a single style — but they do all have a singular goal: to reach students in ways that have deep and lasting influence on how they think and act throughout their lives and careers.”

—Anonymous

CREATE is an energetic research and partnership development center addressing one of the major challenges facing California and San Diego: getting our diverse community of young people prepared for, admitted to and succeeding in college and careers.

Every day we ask ourselves this question: what would it take to get the region's young people into classrooms at institutions like UC San Diego, contributing their ideas and energy to the future of California?

CREATE houses an innovative team of researchers, youth mentors and professional development experts working with the region's teachers. We envision the San Diego region as a system of partners working together to support young people's development.
